Practical information

Getting to Novi Sad

Novi Sad has good transport connections with nearby cities thanks to its great position. It is located about 80km to the northwest of Belgrade, about 300km from Budapest, 424 km from Ljubljana, 309km from Zagreb, 548 km from Podgorica, 480 km from Sofia, 150km from Timisoara (Romania), 100 km from the border town (with Hungary) of Subotica and about 100km from the Romanian border town of Jimbolia.

By plane

The city itself does not have an airport and the closest one is Nikola Tesla International Airport (IATA: BEG) near Belgrade (about 70 kilometers). There are no direct buses from the airport. Some taxi companies run regular cars between Belgrade Airport and Novi Sad, with fixed prices for private transfers (around 4000 RSD / € 35 for a private car), e.g.

Other useful airports with low-cost flights might be:

- Budapest Ferihegy International Airport (IATA: BUD) (247 kilometers from Novi Sad, serving numerous low-cost airlines, the best way to get to Western/Northern Europe by plane)
- Timisoara Traian Vuia International Airport (IATA: TSR) (126 kilometers from Novi Sad, serving Wizz Air)

By car

The E-75 highway that connects Belgrade and Budapest passes by some 5km from Novi Sad. Note that here is a toll fare for vehicles, also payable in EUR.

If you want to go in the direction of Zagreb, Ljubljana take E-70 highway which is some 40km south/west of Novi Sad.

By bus

Within Serbia, Novi Sad is connected by bus to all other major cities. The most frequent route is the one from Belgrade, with buses leaving every 15 minutes during peak hours and a total of nearly 100 journeys each day in each direction.

Internationally, the city has frequent bus connections to Sofia in Bulgaria, Budapest in Hungary, Zagreb, Vukovar, and Osijek in Croatia, Sarajevo and Banja Luka in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Budva, Tivat, Podgorica, Herceg Novi in Montenegro. It is also reachable from Germany and Austria.

For urban, domestic long-distance and international bus timetables in Serbian and English, visit the web site of JGSP Novi Sad, the city public transport company at http://www.gspns.co.rs/?selected_lang=eng.

By train

Daily trains to and from Budapest are around 20 euro (Return tickets are 26 Euro). The journey takes about 7 hours. For train timetables and reservations, visit <http://www.srbvoz.rs/eng/timetable.html>.

In Novi Sad

The best way to get round the city is on foot. The city centre is actually quite small and most of the interesting sights, bars and hotels are all within easy walking distance. There are plenty of street maps, especially in the centre, so you can find your way easily.

Alternatively, you can use public transport service. Novi Sad has an excellent bus service. The ticket for one ride (no matter how far you go as long you don't change the bus) costs 65 RSD (0,5EUR) and is bought from the driver.

Taxis are not overly expensive (by Western standards), the minimum fare is about 100RSD, with a cross-city trip typically costing 300-400 RSD. It helps to have the address written out although many taxi drivers speak fair English. Here is a list of some reliable taxi companies and their numbers (with the local code, if you are calling from a local mobile number): Crveni Taxi (021 455 577), Delta Taxi (021 522 622), Grand Taxi (021 443 100), Luks Taxi (021 445 445), MBR Taxi (021 500 222), Naš Taxi (021 6300 300), Novus Taxi (021 500 700), Pan Taxi (021 455 555), Red Taxi (021 525 150), SOS Taxi (021 450 400), VIP Taxi (021 444 000), Vojvođani Taxi (021 522 333)

NOTE: Be careful of taxis unaffiliated with one of the major firms (especially at the train station), or you may pay up to four times more than your fare should be.
